You choose to pay for gas at the pump using your Netspend card. Let's say you fill your gas tank with $35.00 guest. However, a temporary author tiger holder of up to $100 or more can be placed on your Card account. Typically within three days, the deal will array for only the actual amount of the gas purchased. This means the additional funds held will be released back to the card, so those funds ($65.00 or more, depending on the amount of the container) available to you. Note: you can avoid the authorization hold by paying a Netspend card to the cashier inside the petrol station instead of paying at the pump. Use a Netspend card to pay for a car rental. You can use a Netspend card at car rental agencies that accept prepaid cards. However, they usually require a deposit of 15 percent more than the cost of hiring the car. The rental agency will put an extra hold on the account for that amount of money and the hold can last for a few weeks. We suggest you call the car rental agency to inquire about how much they need for a standard deposit if you pay with a prepaid card and how long a typical authorisation hold will last on a prepaid card. Using a Netspend card to pay for a hotel room, you can use a Netspend card at selected hotels that accept prepaid cards to make a room booking. However, you should expect the hotel to put a hold on your card. The container will typically cover the hotel room rate plus an additional 15 percent, and the funds will be held until the hotel establishes the deal. A typical hotel authorisation hold can be released the day of checkout, or the container can take up to a few weeks to settle and be released. We suggest you call the hotel to query how much they need for a standard deposit if you pay with a prepaid card, and how long a typical authorisation hold will last on a prepaid card.
